Macro backdrop

The ICE BofA European Currency Non-Financial High Yield 2% Constrained Index (in euros) delivered a total return of -0.3% (and flat excess returns) in the fourth quarter, with credit spreads widening. In terms of excess returns (versus government debt), single B-rated bonds outperformed over the quarter, followed closely by CCC-rated and below. BB-rated bonds delivered small negative excess returns.

Apprehension regarding Covid-19, inflation and central bank rhetoric were key themes over the quarter, with concerns around the Chinese property market also weighing.

November saw a return to tighter restrictions, and in some cases lockdowns, in the face of another wave of coronavirus infections which partly caused credit spreads to widen significantly. However, early evidence suggesting the variant is less potent than previous strains saw spreads tighten in December to recover some of November's losses, though spreads were wider overall on the quarter.

Inflation remained elevated throughout the period causing global central banks to act with a hawkish tilt in December. High yield investors generally absorbed this hawkish turn well which, alongside favourable technicals into year end, caused high yield spreads to tighten in December.

Fund performance and activity

While the fund delivered a negative return over the quarter, it performed in-line with its benchmark over the period.

Security selection added to relative returns. One of the top performers over the period was an overweight position to Portuguese insurer Fidelidade. The previously unrated name received a BBB default rating from Fitch. This led to significant tightening in the bonds, which saw us take some profits and half our position.

Further positive performance came from our exposure within the automotive sector such as our overweight position to Ford, which we continue to believe is a rising star candidate.

On the negative side, the overweight position to real estate was the principal drag on relative returns over the period, with the sector performing weakly. Security selection within real estate also detracted from returns. While there were no significant single name detractors, small negative relative returns came from overweights to Signa Development, Heimstaden and Citycon.
